The core of Friedman's argument is that, while Washington is the overt capital of the United States, the Dulles corridor west of the city is the "covert capital of the U.S. empire." (19) It is in this area, stretching from Alexandria to Dulles Airport and bounded on the north by the Potomac River and on the south by Route 236, that the "seemingly natural privacy afforded by the suburbs lent itself to the secrecy beneficial to both the U.S. government and suburban life," making ...
