Dark tourism involves the actual visiting of black spots. There are different black spots which are visited daily by tourists and therefore belong to sites of dark tourism. Furthermore, several tours are initiated around dark sites. Commercial motives, in terms of entrance fees, are often involved. Examples are the 'Jack the Ripper tour' in London or the tour in Charleroi which shows you ...

Dark tourism, on the other hand, is much more of a mind-broadening exercise. In the process it acknowledges the ambivalence of being both appalled and at the same time fascinated by the darker sides of reality. To pick a personal example: politically I am against nuclear energy, or nuclear weapons, but as a topic I am deeply fascinated by their existence and what they mean to our world.
