A solitary piece of the tragic Kumeyaay mosaic is preserved in the autobiography of Delfina Cuero. This simple woman's account of survival as her world and worldview are swept away by an unstoppable deluge of European newcomers is touching and heart wrenching. It's also a shameful indictment of the horrendous treatment these fellow humans received from successive waves of Spanish, Mexican and American conquerors.

Delfina Cuero was born into a Kumeyaay family just before 1900. She grew up in the old ways that her people always followed in the region north of modern San Diego. Her grandfather sang ancient songs and led ceremonial dances. Her grandmother, born at San Diego Mission, told stories about the old ways.

This volume chronicles the life of a Kumeyaay woman who lives between three cultures and across the boundary of the US and Mexico. She was raised in a small family, who only had a donkey to carry their few possessions. They survived by working small ranches and living in the canyons where they could. Their foraging territory included Mission Valley, the backcountry of SD, Eastside canyons of the US and Mexico and all the way to the Gulf of California. Having no papers, she lost her husband and was forced to make terrible compromises to survive with her children. All this cultural disintegration has a bit of a happy ending when she gets some papers and stays on a reservation near Campo. Cuero demonstrated an encyclopedic knowledge of useful plants and management of the Chaparral environment, making ethnobotanic contributions to Torrey Pines State Park and Mission Bay Salt Marsh Reserve until her death in 1972.

California is a contentious arena for the study of the Native American past. Some critics say genocide characterized the early conduct of Indian affairs in the state; others say humanitarian concerns. Robert F. Heizer, in the former camp, has compiled a damning collection of contemporaneous accounts that will provoke students of California history to look deeply into the state's record of race relations and to question bland generalizations about the adventuresome days of the Gold Rush. Robert F. Heizer's many works include the classic The Other Californians: Prejudice and Discrimination under Spain, Mexico, and the United States to 1920 (1971), written with Alan Almquist. In his introduction, Albert L. Hurtado sets the documents in historical context and considers Heizer's influence on scholarship as well as the advances made since his death. A professor of history at Arizona State University, Hurtado is the author of Indian Survival on the California Frontier.

The autobiography of the queen of mystery, Agatha Christie.

Indian remains in the Smithsonian cause ghosts to haunt, torment, and murder researchers--even as they themselves are tormented by the items in the museum's collection.

Looks at the Indians who survived the invasion of white settlers during the nineteenth century and integrated their lives into white society while managing to maintain their own culture

In Sovereign Stories, Annette Angela Portillo examines Native American women ' s autobiographical discourses and multiple-voiced life stories that resist generic conventional notions of first-person narrative. She argues that these " sovereign stories " and " blood memories " not only reveal the multilayered histories and identities shared by each author, but demonstrate how their narratives are grounded in ancestral memory and land. These autobiographies recall settler-colonialism, deterritorialization, and genocide as the writers and activist-scholars reclaim their voices across cultural, national, and digital boundaries. Portillo provides close readings of memoirs, life stories, oral histories, blogs, social media sites, and experimental multigenre narratives including those by Delfina Cuero, Ruby Modesto, Leslie Marmon Silko, Pretty-Shield, Zitkala-Sa, and Sarah Winnemucca Hopkins.

First as a cultural resource management project for a public transportation agency in the San Francisco Bay area, historian Shoup and anthropologist Milliken document the history of Rancho Posolmi and especially of its first owner, an Ohlone (Costanoan) Indian whose Christian name was Lope Inigo (1781-1864). "This outstanding volume links the analysis of community and social organization with macro-level processes and history. Examines how gender, ethnicity, and local concepts of power relate to national identity, economy, and power. A fascinating discussion of Mexican society and the revolutionary change occurring along Mexico's northern border"--Handbook of Latin American Studies, v. 57.
