Speech and language skills do not just evolve on their own. They are part of a bigger picture involving social interaction, play, observation, manipulating objects, listening and attending. All these factors are working together and often, without one, it is difficult to develop another.

Activities to develop Speech and Language Skills

Using sentences as part of language development. By five years, children can follow three-step directions. Your child can understand and combine words to form active sentences – for example, ‘The cat chased the dog’. He’s also starting to understand passive sentences – for example, ‘The cat was chased by the dog’.
