The 1920s was a key decade in poetry: modernism really came to the fore, with a number of major poets adopting an increasingly experimental approach to form, rhyme, imagery, and subject matter. Below, we introduce and discuss some of the best and most notable poems from the 1920s. Ezra Pound, Hugh Selwyn Mauberley. We begin...

The world’s ablaze in wind, the cities blister. Hello, the storm, the great storm is at the hilt. A little girl is ripped away from her sister. Escaping to Ithaca is a car just built. A path has lost its way entirely. The stars in the sky have been eroded. A future madhouse inmate’s born prematurely.

Poems: 1911-1940 collects 149 of F. Scott Fitzgerald's verses (poems, jingles, doggerel) written over the entire span of his career, plus the fifty-five lyrics he wrote for three Triangle Club musicals as a Princeton undergraduate. These are not great poems; but they are poems by a great writer. Fitzgerald was a failed poet.

Robert Bridges, poet laureate of England from 1913 to 1930, is an important cultural link between the Victorian Age and the modern period. This bibliography updates and expands George McKay's A Bibliography of Robert Bridges (1933) and is the first gathering of reviews, articles, essays, books, and other scholarly notes about Bridges.

This volume brings together all of John Berryman's poetry, except for his epic The Dream Songs, ranging from his earliest unpublished poem (1934) to those written in the last months of his life (1972). John Berryman: Collected Poems 1937-1971 is a definitive edition of one of America's most distinguished poets.

In this illustrated compendium Brucoli chronicles F. Scott Fitzgerald's posthumous rise in literary reputation - and the corresponding rise in collectibility of all things Fitzgerald - as evidenced by listings from auction house and antiquarian bookseller catalogues.
